

EDITORS' NOTE

We are excited to present our second volume of the Journal of Reflective Inquiry. The Journal of Reflective Inquiry is housed within the University Honors Program at North Carolina State University. Unlike most results-oriented academic journals, ours provides a space for reflection on and discussion of the scholarly research process. Reflections may focus on what individuals learn about themselves while conducting their research, or they may describe the societal implications of their work. Anyone who wishes to write about the research process is welcome to submit to the journal regardless of academic discipline or institutional affiliation.

Each editorial board has sought to further define the mission and expand the scope of the journal. Specifically, we hope to do so by exploring new article formats. For this issue, we are excited to share two interviews — one conducted by the editorial board and another from a submitter. We hope you will find these pieces insightful. Additionally, we hope that future issues will feature articles in more exploratory formats.

The editorial board would like to express our gratitude to Dr. Aaron Stoller for his instrumental role in establishing this journal, and for his support as our faculty adviser for the past four years. We look forward to working with our new adviser Dr. Genia Sklute. Additionally, we thank all who have submitted articles to this issue. If you are interested in submitting, please feel free to contact the editorial board. Whether you are an undergraduate student or a tenured professor, we would love to hear your ideas.
